Two-Thirds, Grayscale, and Black and White: Photoshop has powerful tools that let you alter images in ways that can hardly be done in other image editing programs. By using the adjustment layers, you can create a number of different overlays that can give the image different versions of itself. In Figure 6-1, you can see two different ways to create a black-and-white effect. The drawing screen in the figure shows the version with the original picture. The desaturated version shown in the lower-left corner, in the dark-and-light version, is created using two adjustment layers. Figure 6-1: Use layers to create many different versions of the same image. Color: Because you can include layers of colors, the program is used by photographers to remove color blemishes from their images. The color picker adds colors to an image in fine detail, including shades of gray, and lets you sample a color of your choice from the scene to use in the image. One of the best ways to edit a photo is to overlay a piece of paper or another flat surface onto the image. You can then draw around areas of the image that you don't like or mask out areas that you don't want to see. To do this, pick the Eraser tool in Photoshop. Adjustment Layers: Images are full of imperfections such as color, brightness, or contrast issues. By using adjustment layers, you can make easy changes to a photo. Figure 6-2 shows an example of adjustment layers. The layers in the image are named Window, Image, Levels, Curves, and Vibrance and Saturation. In this example, the window layer is used to add a drop shadow to the image. Figure 6-2 shows the image with the drop shadow. Figure 6-2: You can edit images in many ways. Filters and Effects: Photoshop has powerful filters that let you add interesting effects to images. The filters can create a range of looks such as Old Photograph, Old Painting, and Impressionist painting. When choosing a filter or effect, make sure to play around to find what works best with your image. Don't use the Filter Gallery to hide pixels

Q: how to do unlink in php and c#? if i use these code, i can't delete files in sql using php: $link = mysql_connect('localhost','root','root'); mysql_select_db('15',$link); $query=mysql_query("UPDATE ips SET b[]=0 WHERE id = 1"); if(mysql_query($query)){ header('Location:'); } if(isset($_GET['id'])){ $id = $_GET['id']; unlink('/upload/templates/'.$id.'/'); } header('Location:'); and i have that error: Warning: unlink(/upload/templates/1/): is not a directory in C:\wamp\www\15\unlink1.php on line 17 i want how i can do this with c#? A: In C# you would just need to make sure that the path is correct, for example: var directoryPath = Path.Combine(Server.MapPath("~/"), "Path", "To", "The", "Directory"); Response.Redirect(string.Format("/{0}/unlink.php?id={0}", directoryPath.Replace("/", "/"))); Not sure if that would be any good though. Radio host Mel B is really upset with her ex-husband Stephen Belafonte — as she rants about his ties to alleged child rapist Larry Nassar! In an interview with HLN's Nancy Grace posted on Friday, June 7, Mel insists that Stephen — who starred on the 1970's sitcom The Belafonte Show — was "never involved with anything" involving the disgraced doctor who was convicted of sexual abuse against multiple former athletes. "He has no child from Larry. I am being accused [of] being involved with Larry Nassar," Mel insists. "Now, this is f—king a joke. He's never been involved with anything with Larry. I have been married to this man for 33 years." Mel says she

What's New in the How To Download Texture In Photoshop?

A typical communication network includes a packet data network and a fixed network, wherein the data network provides a large packet data service that is accessible to many types of end users, and the fixed network provides circuit switched services to a subset of the end users that use the data network to access the fixed network. For example, at a given location (e.g., within a company, within a building, within a city, etc.), there are typically a number of different fixed networking services available (e.g., Ethernet, telephone, cable television, etc.), wherein different users within the location will be allocated different services for use based on their location, usage requirements, and so on. These different services are typically independent of each other, and thus, the users at a given location cannot use the services provided by one service to gain access to another service. The different services are also independent of one another in that each service provides its own data access protocols, and the service providers do not coordinate their services so that a user can gain access to another service by way of a network circuit switched network. For example, a local Ethernet network may be provided by a local Ethernet service provider, while a cable service using a proprietary hybrid fiber cable system may be provided by a cable service provider. Communication networks can provide the flexibility of high availability communications services in a cost efficient manner. However, users of communication networks may have the need to use a service from a particular provider that is not available from another provider. Thus, a user who wants to use a circuit switched service from a local provider of Ethernet service may be unable to utilize an Ethernet service offered by a cable company, since an Ethernet service is not provided in a proprietary hybrid fiber cable system. When a communication network is formed, a service provider typically offers an end user the ability to subscribe to one or more services. The service provider will typically notify the end user of new services and/or amendments to existing services by placing advertisements in a periodic newsletter. This form of notification, however, may be insufficient for certain end users. For example, a user in a particular location may desire to subscribe to a particular service, but he or she may not be aware of the particular service (e.g., because the service is not advertised in the periodic newsletter) and/or the service may be priced more than the user's budget. The service provider may occasionally offer a subscribing user a "deal". The "deal" is typically a series of discounts or free services (e
