iphone Falsehoods Programmers Believe About Names I'm sure we all learned a bunch of things in elementary and middle school that we proudly believed just because everyone else did and we figured it must be true. But did you actually learn these "truths"? Read on if so... 1. The name "Appel" is derived from the apple tree and is pronounced like someone saying apple. This is actually based in truth, but what we learn long ago may not be the reason the name is so mispronounced. In fact, it may have been named by its Germanic cognate and ancestor-jr, the apple: "appel(e)". The confusion comes from the fact that this word is a noun and an adjective. Appel is, of course, pronounced "appil". If you're not taking notes right now, then I'm afraid you're missing on a valuable opportunity to deliver a great summation of fine linguistics. 2. The word "stron" is a short form of "storm" and a metaphor is sometimes used to describe a person or group who is operating under very turbulent conditions, like being wrapped up in a tornado.
