Activity of cyclooxygenase-2 in cultured human esophageal epithelial cells: biochemical mechanisms and biological implications. Recent studies have shown a correlation between the up-regulation of cyclooxygenase (COX)-2 and human esophageal cancer. The presence of human COX-2 in a normal esophageal epithelium, however, has not been demonstrated. We investigated the expression of the constitutive form of human COX-2 in cultured human esophageal epithelial cells using a Western blotting technique. Exposure of the cells to transforming growth factor (TGF)-beta 1, a potent inducer of COX-2 expression, resulted in up-regulation of COX-2 expression. COX-2 activity in the esophageal epithelial cells was also confirmed by the detection of the products of COX-2 activity, prostaglandin E2 and thromboxane B2. These results indicate the presence of COX-2 in cultured human esophageal epithelial cells and that COX-2 activity can be modulated by TGF-beta 1. The results suggest a potentially important role of COX-2 in the development of human esophageal cancer.
